Vier Gas Transport GmbH raises the group's EBITDA forecast for the financial year 2023 from EUR 500-600 million to EUR 750-900 million.

The strong increase is mainly caused by the low level of commodity prices for electricity and natural gas since the beginning of the year, resulting in substantially reduced overall expected cost for fuel energy.

At the same time, the company realises additional transport revenues due to consistently high demand for capacities.

As these factors remain subject to considerable uncertainty, the company has consequently widened the range of the group's EBITDA forecast to EUR 150 million.

In accordance with the German regulatory regime, both effects generate "excess revenues" which will be refunded to the market via the regulatory account mechanism by way of tariff reductions in future periods.

The underlying operative business and investments are developing in line with expectations. The company therefore confirms the CAPEX forecast for 2023 at the current level of EUR 400–460 million.
